Geography

How does human activity affect our fragile mountain landscapes?

This study explores how human activity shapes and impacts our fragile mountain landscapes. Beginning with the topographical features of mountains and hills, it takes a close look at Cornwall's iconic uplands before examining the physical characteristics, climates, and ecosystems of the UK's major mountain ranges. The focus then widens to global mountain systems, including the Himalayas, culminating in an investigation of Mount Everest and the environmental consequences of exploration and tourism.
